

Marie-Curie Conference 11

6-9 December 2007

International Intervention Politics of the EU and National Agencies in the Regularisation of Migration and Settlement Lisbon (Portugal)

This conference focuses on the politics of international intervention and on the management of migration on the European level. There are two prominent, but conflicting positions in immigration management strategies: The liberal strategy views migration as a free market in which borders should be open, and migrants should be free to choose where and how they can best contribute to economic growth. The conservative approach emphasises border controls and the market-oriented governance of immigration. This meeting will focus on the future role and positioning of institutions of migration management in both Europe and the European nation states.

Programme

Thursday

Morning Seminar: The European Position
Evening Workshop: Gender Mainstreaming in Research and Politics of Migration Management

Friday

Morning Seminar: The Resistance of Immigrants and Refugees
Evening Workshop: Social Research Methodology: Training session

Saturday

Morning Seminar: Liberal and Conservative Positions in Migration Management
Evening Workshop: The Philosophical Approach

Sunday

Morning Seminar: The Collaboration between National and European Agencies